Invitation to take part

You are invited to take part in a study on decision making and everyday behavior. It consists of a short decision task and two questionnaires and takes about 10 minutes. You can do it on your own smartphone or computer.

Participation is voluntary. Once you start, please complete the study in one sitting without interruption. If you want to stop, close this page; incomplete responses are not kept.

Your answers are stored under a random participant code; no names or email addresses are stored with them. Anonymized data may be shared publicly for research.

- [ ] I have read the above and agree to take part.
- [ ] I am 18 years or older and a student at [university].

Decision Task

"Lucky" and "unlucky"

In this task you will be paired with one other person who takes part in this study at some point during the study period. You never meet or interact online, and neither of you will learn who the other is.

After the study closes, a computer lottery splits all participants into a "lucky group" and an "unlucky group" of equal size and pairs one person from the lucky group with one person from the unlucky group.

Each person in the lucky group receives a gift of 1,000 yen. People in the lucky group have two options:

1. Keep the whole 1,000 yen.
2. Share any part of it, or all of it, with the paired person in the unlucky group (who received no gift). That person stays anonymous to you, and you stay anonymous to them.

Because the lottery has not been drawn yet, everyone now decides as if they were in the lucky group. The decisions of those who end up in the lucky group are carried out exactly: they keep what they did not give, and their partner in the unlucky group receives what was given.

You decide only once. There are no right or wrong answers.

Example: if a person in the lucky group gives 200 yen, they keep 800 yen and their partner receives 200 yen.

Your decision

Suppose you are in the lucky group. You receive a gift of 1,000 yen.

How much of the 1,000 yen do you give to your partner in the unlucky group?

Enter any amount from 0 to 1,000 (yen). Your decision is final once you press "Next".

300 yen

You keep: 700 yen

Your partner receives: 300 yen
